When you understand the difference between a wish and a desire, you will find success in your endeavors.

People say these words are interchangeable. I disagree and I think knowing the difference between these two words separates the winners from the losers.

A wish is passive. The way people use it is passive. It's feeling or hoping for something to happen that is not easily attainable.

Desire is an active process because you know that whatever you desire is attainable. You change yourself and look for opportunities actively. You set your sights on the top of the mountain and prepare accordingly.
